Organizations require individuals to make them work. An Organization is nothing without human assets. Literature Review

Human Resource Management (HRM) is an anticipated approach to supervision people lucratively for performance. It aims to construct a more open, bendable and compassionate administration style so that employees will be provoked, industrial and managed in a way that they can furnish of their greatest to carry department's missions. Good HRM practices are implicated in selection reach departmental objectives and add to productivity. Human resource management is the process of planning, recruiting, selecting employees and providing proper training and developing employee skill.

"Human resource management refers to the practices and policies you need to carry out the personnel aspects of your management job, specifically, acquiring, training, apprising, rewarding and providing in a safe, ethical and fair environment for your company's employees (Dessler, 2011)." "Human Resource Management is defined as a strategic and coherent approach to the management of an organization's most valued assets – the people working there who individually and collectively contribute to the achievement of its objectives (Armstrong, 2006)." "Human resource management (HRM) is a strategic, integrated and coherent approach to the employment, development and well-being of the people working in organizations (Armstrong, Armstrong's Handbook of Human Resource Management Practice, 2009)."

"Human resource planning is a process in which an organization attempts to estimate the demand for labor and evaluate the size, nature and sources of the supply which will be required to meet that demand (Reilly, 1996)." "Human resource planning helps to align human resource work contribution with that of the organization they support in order to schedule activities that would be more meaningful and productive and align with the mission of the organization it supports (Deb, 2006)". "Human resource planning is a planning process by which an organization can move from its current manpower position to its desired manpower position. Through manpower planning, an organization strives to have the right number and the right kinds of people at the right places at the right time (Bhattacharyya, 2006)".

The recruiting and selection process is a series of steps, as follows (Dessler, 2011):-

- Do workforce planning and forecasting to determine the position to fill.
- Build a pool of candidates for the job by recruiting internal or external candidates.
- Have the applicants fill out application forms and perhaps undergo an initial interview.
- Utilize various selection techniques such as, test, background investigations and physical exams to choose job candidates.
- Send one or more job candidates to the supervisor responsible for the job.
- Have the candidates go through one or more selection interviews with the supervisor and other relevant parties and determine to which candidate(s) to make an offer.

The four stages of recruitment and selection are as follows (Armstrong, Armstrong's Handbook of Human Resource Management Practice, 2009):-

- Defining requirements – preparing role profiles and person specifications; deciding terms and conditions of employment.
- Planning recruitment campaigns.
- Attracting candidates – reviewing and evaluating alternative sources of applicants, inside and outside the company: advertising, e-recruiting, agencies and consultants.
- Selecting candidates – sifting applications, interviewing, testing, assessing candidates, assessment centres, offering employment, obtaining references; preparing contracts of employment.

The strategy of training involves three steps (Bass & Vaughan, 1966):-

- Statements of the content of the training program, characteristics of the learner and his environment, the over-all organizational climate, and the relation of training to company goals.

- Decisions about how and by whom the content will be taught, including discussion of both current industrial training techniques and promising innovations and the extent to which they conform to the principles of learning.
- Administration and evaluation of the training program. Training needs and the effectiveness of training programs must be assessed continuously in a carefully designed and executed research program.

Training is an activity leading to skilled behavior, the process of teaching employees the basic skills they need to perform their jobs. The heart of a continuous effort designed to improve employee competency and organizational performance (iEduNote).

A performance appraisal is a regular review of an employee's job performance and overall contribution to a company. Also known as an annual review, performance review or evaluation, or employee appraisal, a performance appraisal evaluates an employee's skills, achievements, and growth--or lack thereof (HAYES, 2021).

Compensation is a systematic approach to providing monetary value to employees in exchange for work performed. Compensation may achieve several purposes assisting in recruitment, job performance, and job satisfaction. An ideal compensation management system will help you significantly boost the performance of your employees and create a more engaged workforce that's willing to go the extra mile for your organization. Such a system should be well-defined and uniform and should apply to all levels of the organization as a general system.. Plus you'll enjoy clearer visibility into individual employee performance when it comes time to make critical compensation planning decisions. With effective compensation management you'll also enjoy clearer visibility into individual employee performance when it comes time to make critical compensation planning decisions. These performance appraisals assist in determining compensation and benefits, but they are also instrumental in identifying ways to help individuals improve their current positions and prepare for future opportunities. Human Resource is the most vital resource for any organization. It is responsible for each and every decision taken, each and every work done and each and every result. Employees should be managed properly and motivated by providing best remuneration and compensation as per the industry standards. The lucrative compensation will also serve the need for attracting and retaining the best employees (Patnaik & Padhi, 2012).

CHAPTER 04

HUMAN RESOURCE MANAGEMENT

Human Resource Management (HRM) is the term used to portray formal frameworks formulated for the administration of individuals inside an organization. The obligations of a human asset administrator fall into three noteworthy territories: staffing, worker remuneration and advantages, and characterizing/structuring work. The motivation behind HRM is to amplify the profitability of an organization by streamlining the adequacy of its workers. This command is probably not going to change in any principal path, in spite of the regularly expanding pace of progress in the business world. As Edward L. Gubman saw in the Journal of Business Strategy, "the fundamental mission of HR will dependably be to procure, create, and hold ability; adjust the workforce to the business; and be a magnificent supporter of the business. Those three difficulties will never show signs of change.

Until fairly recently, an organization's HR office was regularly committed to bringing down rungs of the corporate chain of importance, despite the way that its command is to recharge and support what is frequently referred to— authentically—as an organization's most prominent asset, its work compel. Be that as it may, as of late acknowledgment of the significance of HR administration to an organization's general well-being has developed significantly. This acknowledgment of the significance of HRM reaches out to private ventures, for while they don't by and large have indistinguishable volume of HR necessities from bigger organizations, they too confront staff administration issues that can decisively affect business wellbeing. As Irving Burstiner remarked in The Small Business Handbook, "Employing the opportune individuals—and preparing them well—can regularly mean the contrast between scratching out the barest of jobs and unfaltering business development, staff issues don't separate among little and huge business. You discover them in all organizations, paying little respect to estimates.

HUMAN RESOURCE MANAGEMENT PROCESS OF MFL

HUMAN RESOURCE PLANNING OF MFL

Planning is the center zone of a considerable number of elements of management. It is the establishment whereupon the other three regions ought to be manufactured. Planning expects the administration to assess where the human assetof the organization is right now, and where it might want to be later on. From thatpoint, a suitable strategy to accomplish the organization's objectives and goals is resolved and actualized.

Each organization has work Planning. Lira Group of Industries has likewise its business Planning. They as a rule estimate their workforce needs dependent on their main goal, key objectives &objectives, and mechanical and different changes bringing about expanded efficiency. Although there are a fewtechniques to foresee workforce needs, however, they utilize administrative judgment since it gives a more genuine situation for staff needs. They believe that alternate techniques can't give the precise circumstance of the workforce needs. These are essentially graphical strategies, which can't gauge the real faculty needs. In any case, the administrative judgment technique relies on the adjustment in efficiency, advertise molded.

RECRUITMENT AND SELECTION PROCESS OF MFL

Recruitment is the way toward distinguishing that the organization needs to utilize somebody up to the time when application shapes for the post have landedat the organization. The selection at that point comprises the procedures associated with browsing candidates for an appropriate possibility to fill a post. Evaluate the Training and Development Strategy of MFL

Lira Group of Industries's HR Department is vigorously dealing with the nonstop preparation; improvement and prosperity of its individuals. Both in-house and outside organizations preparing representatives are attending and progressing the process. For persistent observing and improvement, a profoundly logical participatory Performance Management System is being used for surveying worker requirements and assessing them once in each quarter of the year. Alongside customary projects for HR Development Lira Group of Industries has several Employee Relations Programs.

Training:

Great preparation reduces disappointment and fatigue among directors and laborers. It adds to enhanced human relations and raises confidence. The enhancement in aptitudes builds profitability and diminishes turnover. Through preparation, organizations help make representatives more faithful to the organization. Along these lines, except if the item or administration is just a single of its sort, we are searching for an edge, favorable position something uncommon from the significant rivalry. Also, preparing is one of the most grounded instruments through which strength can be made.

Preparing likewise enables aspiring workers to move forward in their very own vocations. Then again, better item expands consumer loyalty; prompt rehashed business, and vast deals. When we build up workers' potential these things are tremendously related. Preparing is an initiative action, which gets ready people for their own future chances.

To offer preparation to the workers, MFL first discovers the preparation needs. It comprises two procedures:

- Identify the sector/ criteria in which training is needed.
- Identify the employees who need this training.

Training Techniques for MFL

The preparation program in MFL is done on a yearly premise and in the wake of contracting new representatives.
