ABSTRACT

Infringement of human rights is a major concern throughout the world today. It is being made in culture through preventive detention all over the world, especially in the third world countries. It is sad to mention that Bangladesh is not an exception This thesis aims to show that how the law enforcement agencies in Bangladesh have stepped beyond the rules and regulations in the name of preventive detention which is clearly beyond the call of justice. The concern of this paper is primarily surrounds the derogations of personal liberty in terms of preventive detention. An effort has been made in this thesis to understand the natures of Preventive Detention Law. This paper also suggests that threshold of rights to personal liberty can only be meaningful if there are perfect measures to reinforce the application of rule of law.
